Reasons for Allowance

2. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The closest prior art fails to disclose or fairly suggest:

- a) A method including a step of alternating between outputting a first signal and a second signal over a pre-determined time to generate an output signal that is substantially at the desired frequency with respect to the pre-determined time, as called for in claim 1;
- b) A system including a counter operable to increase a count value with reference to the reference signal; and a comparison circuit operable to compare the count value with a target value and output a corresponding comparison signal, in combination with the remaining claimed limitations, as called for in claim 12;
- c) A system, in which a frequency generator operable to generate a first frequency that is lower than a desired frequency and a second frequency that is higher than the desired frequency, and further operable to alternately output the first frequency and the second frequency over a pre-determined period of time to obtain an output signal having an output frequency substantially equal to the associated frequency with respect to the pre-determined period of time; as called for in claim 21; and

d) A method of generating an output signal having a desired frequency, the method includes the following steps a) determining that the first count value has become a current count value that is greater than or equal to the target value; b) calculating a remainder of a division of the current count value by the target value; c) re-setting the counter at an initial count value that is based on the remainder; and d) outputting a second output value, whereby the output signal is obtained, as called for in claim 24.
